

public and private libraries. Thus, some data of the published materials are given as precisely as possible in accordance with those found in the catalogues of each library. This list does not include any titles related with individual stories from the Arabian Nights, such as Aladdin, Ali Baba etc., which surely circulated, even in the 18th century, probably in the form of popular literature, such as chapbooks in English and bibliothèque bleue in French. As for English chapbooks of the Arabian Nights or other stories, we have only indirect information, but no actual samples published in the 18th century. For this matter, see Irwin (1994: 19) and Musawi (1981: 11).

In France, we find similar popular books actually published in Troyes and circulated in the 18th century. For example, one rare book of bibliothèque bleue, now preserved in the National Museum of Ethnology (NME), is La Lampe Merveilleuse, ou Histoire d'Aladdin, which was published around 1760 in Troyes, chez Garnier. For the Arabian Nights in the bibliothèque bleue, see Mandrou (1975). As apparent in the following bibliography, the dates of publication of each volume are often difficult to determine, especially earlier prints of French, English and German editions. This is partly because the publishers printed a new set of all volumes or just particular volumes whenever their previous stock sold out.

Notes

- 1) The exact dates of publication of each volume, and also their relation with reprinted and pirated volumes, are still matters to be clarified. According to Mahdi (1995), which is concerned with the relationship between Galland's translation and the so-called Galland manuscripts preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, rather than the exact date of the publication, the first two volumes were published in 1704, and the volumes, 3, 4, 5, 6 in 1705, and the volume 7 in 1706, and the volume 8 in 1709, which was printed by the publisher without Galland's permission, notoriously including the stories taken from Pétis de la Croix's Les Mille et Un Jours. In 1712, the volumes, 9 and 10, appeared. The last two volumes, 11 and 12, were published posthumously in 1717 (Galland died in 1715). Mahdi's survey is based on Galland's diary and his "Avertissement" attached as a preface to some of the volumes. His conclusion or premise about the date of the publication is the same as usually recognized in the scholarly writings. However, when we make a bibliographical survey of the first prints actually preserved in our hands, the situation will prove to be rather complicated. When we compare the volumes preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale (BN) in Paris (lacking vol. 3), to the volumes in the Macdonald collection (MC) at the Hartford Seminary Foundation (see Brockway 1971;1973;1974), and the ones in the National Museum of Ethnology (NME), Osaka, the following can be gleaned: (1) The dates of volume 7 and above are exactly the same, and can be assured; (2) Vol. 1 is from 1704 in BN, while from 1705 in MC and NME; (3) Vol. 2 is 1705 in all the cases; (4) Vols. 3 and 4 are both from 1704 in all the cases; (5) Vols. 5 and 6 are both from 1705 in all the cases. Volume 1 in BN is the genuine first print, while those in MC and NME are later prints (second print?). Volumes 2 and above must be the first prints in all cases. If we accept this situation, the exact dates of vols. 2, 3, and 4 seem to be a problem. Are all of them later reprints with wrong publication dates? It is highly possible that the publisher or bookseller reprinted individual volumes as soon as they were sold out, and that a whole set comprised individual volumes just as the bookseller had them on stock. The mystery of the dates of the first publication of Galland's Mille et Une Nuit is trivial compared with the mystery of the provenance of the story of Aladdin. In this connection, we should consider the popularity of the Arabian Nights in France. We need a thorough bibliographical survey of the Arabian Nights during in the 18th century, and quantitative evaluation of its distribution. For the discussion on the date of Galland's translation, see also Macdonald (1932) and Knipp (1964). (Cf. MC collection: vol. 1, 2, 5, 6=1705, Paris: la Veuve de Claude Barbin; vol. 3, 4=1704, Paris: la Veuve de Claude Barbin; vol. 7=1706, Paris: la Veuve de Claude Barbin; vol. 8=1709, la Veuve Ricoeur; vol. 9, 10=1712, Florentin Delaulne; vol. 11, 12=1717, Florentin Delaulne. Cf. NME collection: vol. 1, 2, 5, 6=1705, Paris: la Veuve de Cl. Barbin; vol. 3, 4=1704, Paris: la Veuve de Cl. Barbin; vol. 8=1709, la Boutique de Claude Barbin, chez la veuve Ricoeur.)
- 2) The BN catalogue identifies C as Jean-Baptiste Decourdemanche.
- 3) The first English translation was published as early as in 1706, at A. Bell in London, whose copies are now preserved in Princeton University Library, and the Bodleian Library in Oxford (Vol. 1 only in the Opie collection of children's literature). This translation is composed of 4 volumes, but bound as a two-volume set. Each volume has an illustration on the cover page (totalling two illustrations). According to Ms. Kobayashi (Waseda University, personal communication), those two illustrations are identical with the ones found in the pirated version published in La Haye in 1706. La Haye version, which is now preserved in NME, is bound as a two-volume set with one illustration, in the same way as found in the first English version. This implies that the first English Arabian Nights was translated not from the French original, but from the pirated version published in La Haye.

- 4) The exact date of the first printing and following reprints of German translation is still not clear. This first translation may be in 1710 (cf. Marzolph et al. 2004, vol. 2: 725). In the case of German editions, some volumes were sold in couples, so all sets or singles ran into new edition whenever they sold out. The name of Talander, which is a pseudonym of August Bohse, always appeared in the titlepage. For German editions, I follow Olaf Simons's bibliography (see also his web-site, www.pierre-marteau.com.). See also Simons (2001).
- 5) This is a pirated edition of Gleditsch's Die Tausend und eine Nacht, which was published by some dummy publisher called Pierre Marteau. The name of Amander is found, but this may be a pseudonym of some unidentified person, as in the case of Talander. This book contains the same illustration as the first English edition (1706), so some insist that this book was published around 1706. But, according to Olaf Simons, the illustration concerned was surely taken from some later German version published by Gleditsch and Weidmann. (For the German editions, I owe very much to Ms. Yuriko Yamanaka, my colleague.)

- 7) Leeuwen (1999: 427–429).
- 8) Leeuwen (1999: 427) remarks that the first translation was published in 1738. Another date of the first translation is referred to as 1724.
- 9) As for the full bibliographical data, see Papachristophorou (2004: 312). See also note 11 below.
- 10) Leeuwen (1999: 426).
- 11) Prior to Galland's translation, there seemed to be a Rumanian version of the Arabian Nights (hand-written manuscript?) in the 17th century, which had been translated from some Greek version. See Irwin (1994: 62, 73). For more detailed information, see also Norris (1993: 66).
- 12) According to Leeuwen (1999: 426), Halima ou Aravicon mitolghicon (his transliteration), was translated in 1782, and Halima is a Rumanian Sheherazade. See also for the date, Meisles (1973: 239) and the photo of the first page of this work, which is now preserved in the Library of the Rumanian Academy (Ms. rom. 2587). He remarks that the translation was accomplished at the end of the eighteenth century (1783) after a Greek version of 1757. (cf. Norris 1993: 66–67). For more general information of the Arabian Nights in Rumanian, see D. Sasu-Timerman (1959).
- 13) Bochman (1996: 46) remarks that the first Yiddish version was printed in 1796, but Chauvin's Bibliographie lists the version of 1794. According to Bochman (1996: 44), there was a Yiddish adaptation of the Arabian Nights before the first real translation. It was entitled, in Hebrew, Mar'ot Tsof'ot ("Graceful Images") and, in Yiddish, Shpigl fun der Welt ("Mirror of the World").
- 14) Leeuwen (1999: 426).
- 15) This is the first printed Arabian Nights in Arabic, including an Arabic text for "The Tale of the Barber's Fifth Brother". The second edition was published in 1801. For the provenance of the manuscript on which the Arabic text was based, see Irwin (1994: 47, 60).
